Joe was granted an honorable discharge from the Navy November 4, 1945. He requested additional training as a plumber at Pipefitter School.

On his daughter Jane's birth certificate in 1938, Joe is listed as an ironworker for the Oversea Toll and Bridge.

In 1945, his address was listed as 913 Watson St. Key West.

Granddaughter Jane GARCIA Rowland recalls. "He went to an English and Spanish school. Joe's father, Jose, studied to be a Catholic priest but changed his mind."

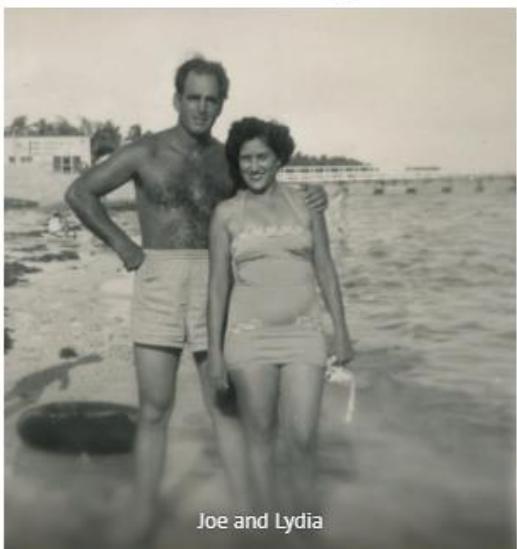

Jane continues, "My dad has washed dishes in a restaurant. He was trained by a famous chef to help him cook meals in Key West. He has worked in Tampa rolling cigars and a pipefitter. He drove a garbage truck, dump trucks for the county, a cabinet maker, a carpenter and as a contractor and subcontractor. He has built houses for millionaires, movie and tv stars, and he built the bar at Sloppy Joe's in Key West. He built Kenno Plaza; he was the contractor. He built hotels and condos in Key West and all up the Florida Keys. He was an overseas Highway bridge builder during the WPA. At the age of 83, he painted my bathroom walls, installed a cabinet, and redid my ceiling. He completely remodeled my sister. Josephine's kitchen, built a laundry room, redid the dining room and computer room."

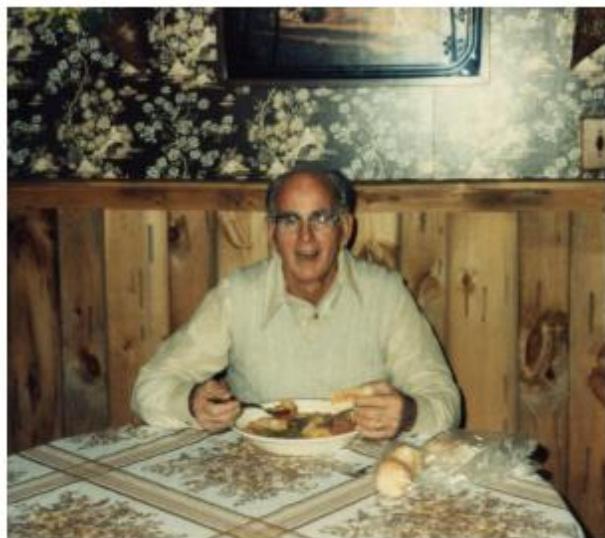

Joe worked as a construction supervisor with Cates Construction. He retired in 1986 after working for them for 32 years.

2nd MARRIAGE

Joe married Lydia LLANEZ Semler November 19, 1954. Joe and Lydia moved to Lakeland, Florida in 1986.

BELLO/GARCIA Name Confusion Explained

Joe is listed with the U.S. Social Security system as Jose Garcia Bello. His gravestone reads Jose G. Bello. He went by the name Joe Bello for most of his adult life. His grandchildren called him Papa Garcia.

This is from his oldest daughter, Jane GARCIA Rowland: "There were several confusing things that concerned my dad's name. He was known for most of his life as Evelio Garcia. It was the name he used to wed my mother, and the first three children were Garcias on their birth certificates. The Spanish custom of using the mothers maiden name caused some confusion, but my dad was never named Rodriguez, which was his mother's maiden name. His dad used the Garcia De Bello title, Bello being his mothers maiden name.

My grandfather signed his name Garcia sometimes. Other times he used Bello and Garcia De Bello. My dad was drafted into the Army during WWII and questions arose about what name was correct. He began to use the Bello name, and my younger sister Rose Mary was named Bello. Then after he wed his second wife and applied for a passport there were all kinds of problems. He sent for his original birth certificate. The name his father gave him was Joseph Evelio Garcia Bello. My father and his second wife decided to change his name legally to Joseph Garcia Bello Jr.

This was legal and his name was Bello from then on. Our names were still Garcia. Elio, his younger brother, who was drafted at the same time, also changed his name to Bello.

I visited my uncle, my dad's oldest brother, Candido 'Beby' Garcia, in the early 1980s. He was very upset about the name change and he did not change his name. He said, "They can change the name on the paper, but they are still Garcias." My dad's two sisters also retained the maiden name of Garcia."

MEMORIES

His granddaughter, Karen, remembers when her papa did that work at her mother's house (Josephine). He tried to get Karen to read the Miami Herald (Spanish edition) to him and she had to remind him that she did not know Spanish. He also tried to get her to help him do some work in the kitchen. She worked with him a little bit but got bored and wandered off. He found her, thumped her forehead, and said, "You hard headed like your Mama."

Joe was known for dropping a cigar stub (unlit of course) into walls he was building all around the Keys. Leaving a bit of him behind. Karen always associates the cigar smell with her Papa Garcia.

Granddaughter Kathy ROWLAND recalls, "I remember when our family first came back stateside and met all of the family. I never knew I had such a big family since I had never met anyone. We all went to Rock City and I bought Grandpa the giant cigar souvenir. I think I was 7 years old then."

Granddaughter, Lynda BURCH Stoller remembers when Papa Garcia came to Atlanta to visit her. "Mother was there as well. We took him to an Atlanta Braves game. He was so overwhelmed with the stadium. He held on to my mother and took baby steps to walk around to take in all the sights. It was so rewarding to see how much he appreciated going to a major league game."

Lynda also recalls, "We were visiting Papa and Grandma Lydia when Robert Kennedy was assassinated. I remember we were in their house and he came running through shouting, "They shot Kennedy." It was very scary to see him so upset.
